This district has too few prospectors who go at their work with the vim that has characterized the owners of the Lead Queen mine, not to recognize their laudable efforts in a substantial manner. These men have not talked about how earnestly they desired to work their mineral claims, but they have worked them. They have built miles of good trail, built two substantial cabins, and ran hundreds of feet of tunnel that would be a credit to any mine anywhere. In fact, they are miners of ability and business, and have shown it. They have now developed their property to an extent that warrants the expenditure of money on a road to the property and the government should not be slow in encouraging them to this extent. If the road cannot all be built now any further work certainly should be on a trail with a wagon road grade, as it would be a waste of money to try to improve the present abominable excuse for a trail. The road, of course, would be only along the creek, as the men have already constructed good trails to their workings.

Denver, Colo., medical men say they have discovered the cause of that tired feeling.

If they have it is not due to impoverished blood, to exhaustion of the vital forces, to incipient heart failure, to rice, color, or previous condition of servitude—nor, in short, to any of the causes which have heretofore been held responsible for it.

The man or woman who is suffering from the complaint, the Denver investigators report, is simply a victim of the germ called uncinnaria.

The uncinnaria is invisible to the naked eye, but under a powerful microscope it looks, we are told, like a rattlesnake. A specimen imported from Georgia has been exhibited before the Colorado Medical society, and the members of that learned body are now in hot pursuit of its natural enemy and destroyer in the germ world. When the latter is found, as found it must inevitably be, it will be possible for anybody who cares to arouse his dormant energies to do so by injecting the antidote into his arm or to mix it with his food.

Whatever the effect of this intelligence may be elsewhere—and it is easy to see why it should create consternation in many quarters—it will come like a thunder-clap out of a clear sky to the Golden telegraph agent and the Wilmer channel to Columbia river.

We believe we are not exaggerating the state of popular feeling in this district when we predict that volunteers in sufficient number can be found to hold some of the townsite-holders while a select committee of citizens is engaged in filling them with anti-uncinnaria serum.

It has long been known that large and frequent doses of boozering will bring snakes in sight of any man, but the antidotes administered in such cases do not kill the the snakes—for they have returned in different instances and frequently in larger numbers—therefore, there may be something in the new discovery. But, just think of a man being tired and a rattlesnake inside of him. Let us all get after the rattlesnake germ.

Clarence E. Darrow of Chicago is probably the most prominent advocate of union labor among the lawyers of America. He was chief counsel for the anthracite miners in their hearing before the arbitration commission, and has been a spokesman for union labor during all his professional career. Deliberately choosing his position when it meant a sacrifice of professional opportunity, he cannot be suspected of interested motives in his utterances; on the contrary his opinion carries weight wherever he is known.

In a speech made in Chicago Mr. Darrow made these telling points:

Trade unionism cannot afford to arouse the hostility of the public.

Trade unionism in its last analysis is really the monopoly of the labor market, and in most of its methods follows in the footsteps of capital.

In the ranks of trade unionism there are tens of thousands of men unacquainted with its principals and out of harmony with its purposes.

When the common people imagine that the trades unions are making unreasonable demands their hostility will be turned against corporate control.

The public will not long be willing to be ground to pieces by the monopolies on one hand and the trade unions on the other.

In order to achieve any permanent trade unionism must stand for the permanent elevation of the common man.

The energy now directed towards organizing men and raising wages must be more largely turned towards the political and economic questions of the day upon which labor, capital and wages depend.

Mr. Darrow's outline of the danger ahead of trade unionism is only a recognition of the trend of public thought on the question. There can be no question but that public sympathy was with the coal miners of Pennsylvania, and that this public support enabled them to win. It is equally certain that some of the recent labor disturbances across the line have alarmed the public because strikes have been inaugurated without just cause and without consideration of the public, which suffered as a result.

A WINDERMERE FETE

Communicated:

Captain and Mrs. Armstrong of the steamer Ptarmigan kindly invited the ladies and gentlemen of Windermere to meet and join them and their friends from Golden in a very interesting and instructive "Flower Guessing Competition," which was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Mrs. Wm. Trynton carried off the first prize, a china teapot; the other prize-takers were Mrs. T. Taylor, playing cards and case, and Mrs. R. A. Kinton, consolation prize of a Battenberg centre piece. The female sex carrying off all the honors. After the presentation all were invited by the genial Captain and his charming wife to partake of tea. The ladies and gentlemen present were: Mesdames J. Brady, J. A. Stoddart, R. A. Kinton, J. Trynton, W. W. Taynton, C. Tryer, R. W. Patmore, T. H. Taylor and J. Taylor, and Messrs. J. Hulman, P. Patmore, P. Hart and E. N. Russell.

The Windermere people take this opportunity to thank Captain Armstrong for his many acts of kindness conferred upon them for his patronage and prizes at the Annual Sports, and his frolics on the lake; in fact for his presence and support in everything that tends to enhance the pleasure of one and all in the entire district, and his absence during the winter months will be severely felt amongst us.
